Background
Na-cho Ny'a'k dun First Nation inhabits land in and around the village of Mayo. Mayo is located 407 km's north of Whitehorse and is surrounded by mountains, numerous lakes, rivers and creeks. The village is situated on the flood plain of the northern bank of the Stewart River, 5 metres above the water level. The area is susceptible to flooding during runoff, but is protected by dikes. The hills and mountains in the area are overgrown with small timber that is cut and hauled to be used locally as firewood.

Historically, Mayo was a fur trade centre; presently there are approximately 78 traplines in the area. When gold and silver were found in local creeks, Mayo Landing emerges as a shipping port and served the mining industry, until a road was built in the 1950's. When the port declined as a result of decreased river traffic, Mayo became a prospecting base for mineral exploration in the surrounding area, rather than a service base.

According to June 1997 statistics, the resident population of Mayo is 507. Mayo's economy includes retail outlets, motels and two transport companies. The tourist trade has taken root in the community with more public facilities opening up, including café, gas station, and wilderness, fishing and touring businesses. The 50 km highway between Mayo and the Klondike Highway at Stewart is referred to as the "Silver Trail." The town functions as a distribution centre for the neighboring communities of Elsa and Keno, although few people have remained in these towns since the United Keno Hill silver mines closed in 1989. During the winter, only about 18 people remain in Keno.

Health Care
The Mayo Nursing Station is a community health centre with health care provided by three community nurse practitioners. The Mayo Nursing Station holds regular clinics Monday to Friday. The centre also provides after-hours emergency service.

Social Services
Community social services include a YTG Health and Social Services social worker, the Yukon Housing Corporation Office, and a Department of Justice probation officer. Yukon Family Services provides counseling services for Mayo out of its Dawson City office. The Na-Cho Ny'a'k Dun First Nation offers social services to its members and in certain cases to the whole community. These include social services administration, a community health worker, and housing department. Through additional partnerships with other governments, they are able to provide Native Court Worker services, homecare, alcohol and drug services, and employment outreach services.

Police/ Fire
Policing is provided by a RCMP detachment of one corporal and two constables. Fire services are provided by a volunteer service through the Village of Mayo. Ambulance and Search and Rescue services are provided by community volunteers through partnerships with the territorial government.
